Outskirts Press, United States, 2011. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 213 x 137 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Flash Bangs: a sparkling array of hundred-word short stories by Andy Underwood is a prime example of Flash Fiction aimed at general readers, who will be excited by a new hundred-word story, every day, for a hundred days. Readers will enjoy getting a quick entertainment fix from these tiny gems, when their reading-time is limited. These flash fiction tales are also ideal for demonstrating e-readers and web posting, because of their compact yet compelling format. These one hundred different tales leave out no genre; they will amuse, inspire and delight all booklovers, who may dip into the collection when they have five minutes to spare. say, while sitting in their commuting transport, or perhaps, while taking a lunch break. In this book, one can find humour and drama, protest and celebration, intrigue and science; even ghost stories and animal lovers are catered for. Favourite twists and turns in these stories reveal the author's commitment to nature conservation, family values and physical well-being. It will astonish readers that even subjects like alcohol-abuse, human-relationships and historical-drama can be tackled in such a novel and succinct fashion. The flexibility of the author's treatment of diverse topics ensures that all the angles are explored; each of the hundred stories appears to take a new and refreshing approach, as though the themes come from the pens of a wide range of writers. In addition, students of literature will get an inspiring introduction, in the author's foreword, to the art form of Drabbles. as hundred-word short stories are called. The author shares his artistic passion in this foreword and one can uncover the original stimulus for some of the stories....
